Bio

Robert Weston is a Dutch country singer-songwriter from the north of the Netherlands. He plays modern country with a classic soul. Inspired by artists such as John Denver, George Strait and Kenny Chesney, he pairs story-driven songs with the contemporary sound of American country radio.

His debut album, Won't Settle Down — recorded in Nashville with producer Kenny Royster — drew international attention and earned him a 2024 Josie Music Award nomination. Robert played the legendary Bluebird Café twice, went on multiple radio tours across the United States (including Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia), and was nominated at the Texas Sounds International Country Music Awards Festival in Marshall, Texas. With over a million streams on Spotify, Robert has built an international fanbase.

Robert also regularly performs alongside Rogier Brink, vocalist and guitarist of Ramblin' Boots — one of the most active touring country bands in the Netherlands with a strong international reputation. The two go back to their time together in Ramblin' Boots, and now bring a set full of tight harmonies and pure country music.

Alongside his own material, Robert also plays great sets of country covers from the ’80s and ’90s as well as today’s country: familiar classics and current hits you can sing and dance along to.
